For this exhibition, the gallery curated pieces that delve into the complexities of human emotions, capturing a range of expressions and figures. NEW BOOK

After over three years of working on illustrations and creating over 250 digital collages (with many more not included), our book is finally published!

Holding the two-volume set in my hands was an incredible experience. Even though I knew every millimeter of these images, seeing them combined with James Broderick's text made them feel entirely new. It was like meeting a new friend for the first time.

Collaborating with Jim has been a fantastic experience! Our weekly phone calls about the text and symbols were incredibly inspiring. I've learned so much about psychology and grown as an artist. Working with symbolic images felt both familiar and refreshingly new to me.

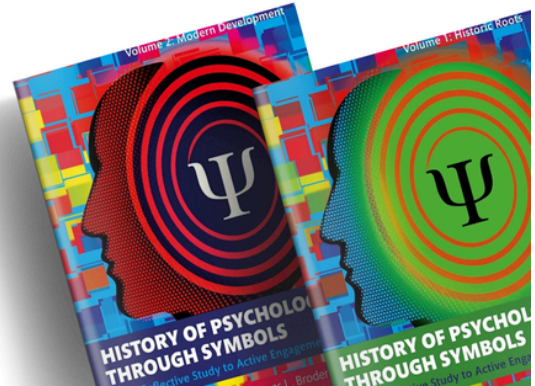

I hope you enjoy the journey through time—from the Axial Age and ancient philosophers to modern psychology and the use of psychedelics in therapy. The book and our website offer opportunities to explore the art and history of psychological thought.

WORKING ON A CHILDREN'S BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS

Meet our Trash Monster!

I've been working as the illustrator for an upcoming children's book! It's been a fantastic journey, and I can't wait for you to see it. I have the privilege of working with the author Peter Martin. This is his third book from the series about a sister and brother having meaningful adventures. This time, they are dealing with ecology and trash problems on the Earth.

Without giving too much away, let's say it's a story close to my heart because of my Scientific background in Ecology. I've had a blast bringing it to life with my illustrations.

The book is almost ready to hit the shelves, and I'll be sharing more updates soon—like the release date, some sneak peeks of the illustrations, and maybe even a launch event. Stay tuned for all the exciting details!

In the meantime, check Peter Martin's website and learn about your previous books.
